Garbage cans sit empty, plastic bags roll around, and containers overflow with water-contaminated debris. Usually, that would be a sign that the city is on the verge of a serious leak. Except in this case, there isn't a leak. The deep puddles are dry and empty. "Someone shut the city off," said one resident. "I've never seen anything like it." It's hard to believe. It seems like a shoddy maintenance plan. City officials insist their environmental services department has done
